A man goes to the doctor with a patch of water on his cheek. Nothing will get rid of it. The doctor is baffled and tells the man to come back next week. When the man returns, the doctor discovers that the patch of water is now surrounded by reeds and grass and tiny trees. The doctor is astonished, but he can't suggest a solution and asks the man to come back in a week's time. The man comes back a third time. The patch of water is now revealed to be a lake surrounded by flowery fields and green woods. Tiny little ducks are splashing in the water and on the grass tiny people are setting out a picnic. "Ah, yes, I can see what this is now," says the doctor, "this is a beauty spot."
